Speyside Famous for producing whisky full of sweetness, with a variety of flavours from light floral to heavy and rich

Islay The smokiest of holy grails for the whisky lover, Islay tends to have a deeper peated flavour than other island whiskies as the distillers dry their malt for longer, to achieve the distinctive smoky note

Lowlands Whiskies from the Lowland Whisky Region are generally a good entry point as they tend to be light and subtle

Islands Incorporates all of the Highland Region distilleries which are not on the mainland, and are similarly diverse in style and production method. They can often be distinguished from other whisky regions by a generally smokier flavour with peaty undertones

Highlands Whisky produced in the Highland Whisky Region is notably diverse in style and the unique production methods employed. In general, Highland malts tend to be more robust, with more pronounced flavors and aroma, and significantly more weight and texture on the palate

Campeltown Campbeltown whiskies are known for their dryness and often for their pungency, with some peat (which they source from Islay). Each maturing barrel collects salt from the surrounding sea, giving them a slight coastal character
